

A Resource for the Entire Family

I saw your first issue and I was overwhelmed in a positive way by all the good, solid information. My nephew has severe epilepsy, my granddaughter has multiple sclerosis (MS), my son's girlfriend has MS and my husband has Alzheimer's disease. These are all different neurological diseases, but they are all brain-related. I cannot believe how appropriate your magazine is to our family. As the kids say, it blew me away.

Bonnie Kvidera
Westchester, Ill.

Like Talking to Your Neurologist

Your magazine is extremely informative — and it's almost like talking to your neurologist. While waiting to see my neurologist recently, I handed a copy of Neurology

Now to a woman in the office looking for something to read. At first, she said she wasn't interested in it. But then she started reading it, looked up and said, "You're right, this magazine is really very interesting." So thanks for a great resource.

I would pay for this magazine, that's how much I love it.

Anne Cannon
Philadelphia, Pa.

The Editors Respond:

We appreciate the sentiment, but we're pleased to offer Neurology Now free to people with neurological disorders and their caregivers. Just call (800) 422-2681 or sign up on our Web site, www.neurology-now.com.

Correction:

There were several errors in the Summer 2005 issue. It was incorrectly stated that duloxetine (Cymbalta) is not approved for the treatment of diabetic neuropathy (page 51). In fact, the Food and Drug Administration approved the medication for this use in September 2004. In addition, Neurology Now apologizes for misspelling names. The corrections follow: Stanley Prusiner, M.D and Ronald C. Petersen, Ph.D., M.D. (page 54); Juliana Lee (64).

We welcome your letters.

Please send them to neurologynow@lwwny.com or fax them to (646) 674-6500.